36. Bardini, Roberto . UN HOMBRE DE LEY. México, D.F: Editorial Resistencia, Secretaría de Cultura (Colección Código Negro), 2016. 189p., wrps. New . Paperback. ISBN: 9786077454144.

"Un hombre de ley" takes place on the fictionalized Pacific island Coralito, which was a prison colony in the 19th century. Today, it has three thousand inhabitants and the only economic activity it boasts of is tourism -- and, very discreetly, gambling and prostitution. Its police force is composed of a woman and five men, all of whom are poorly prepared and have personalities in need of psychoanalysis. Their boss, the "honest" commissioner, Mac-Thief, is a drunkard who is about to retire and enjoy some not-so-honestly earned savings. But suddenly the tranquility of the island is disrupted with a spiral of crimes. Through this narrative, author Roberto Bardini spins a tale full of intrigue, lies and corruption involving local businessmen, millionaires with shady pasts, drug traffickers, Mexican federal agents, US policemen and a foreign tourist who was only looking for a calm refuge.

37. Bardini, Roberto. UN GATO EN EL CARIBE. México, D.F: Editorial Resistencia , 2016. 254p., illus., wrps. New. Paperback. ISBN: 9786077682820.

"Un gato en el Caribe" tells the fictional story of Bugnicourt O'Hara, an ex-Argentine aviator of Irish origin with a past with the law. Now he lives in a quiet retreat in Belize; gone are his hectic days as a smuggler, alcoholic, and fugitive in distant settings like Patagonia, the Nicaraguan jungle, Honduran skies, Mexico streets and Tijuana canteens. Only three scars remain from that time, and each hides a story. This narrative is an adventure novel for adults, featuring stories of conquerors, pirates, politics, drugs, sex, magic, and violence. It is also a testimony to friendship and love, and a nostalgic tribute to Emilio Salgari, Jack London, Joseph Conrad, Ernest Hemingway, Hector G. Oesterheld, Hugo Pratt and Rodolfo Walsh. Features illustrations by Edu Molina.

"Piel de cebolla" is a young adult graphic novel that centers around the story of Rolando, a young man who suffers beneath the weight of a soul-crushing work routine and a lack of meaning in his life. An accident causes him to spend a few days resting, and he sits for hours in front of the TV, consuming junk food. One night, he goes out to a bar with his friends and meets Nera, a woman who lives completely in the moment, fully committed to a hedonistic attitude and nomadic lifestyle. The encounter with her forces Roland to question everything and submerge himself in a new way of life with her, from which he will not escape unharmed. As soon as their adventure begins, both must flee from a terrible band of Hellpigs without renouncing their new motto: build a free life. This work won the National Young Adult Graphic Novel Prize in 2016.

Onion skin deserved the first National Prize for Young Graphic Novel 2016 for its wide narrative resources, technical work, careful speech in its color and the rigor of drawing, which make Edgar Camacho one of the promises of the Mexican comic.

"Día Franco" is a collection of short stories that share one thing in common: the dogs that accompany the protagonists in their everyday grind. The narratives center around characters who are victim to the reins of circumstance: a man who experiences multiple tragedies in one day, a responsible father who fantasizes about infidelities, an insomniac writer who ruminates on his failures, a woman who decides to liberate herself from her fianceé, and a retired journalist incapacitated by old age. In all of these stories, like in real life, dogs seem to rise up from nowhere, filling mundane routines with their presence, and breaking the silence with their howls. Author Adrián Curiel Rivera is also the author of "Unos niños inundaron la casa", "Quién recuerda a doña Olvida", "Madrid al través" and "Mercurio y otros relatos".

"Dijo el camaleón" takes place between Spain and Morocco centuries ago -- between two societies, two religions, two languages, and amid armed confrontation. The narrative centers around two brothers, Mulay and Zhora, who recount the ups and downs they suffered during the early 20th century, after World War I, and their lives in the troubled region of Yebala, northern Africa. The situations they face seem to be extracted from an ancient story out of The Qur'an or One Thousand and One Nights: war, internal strife, intrigue, love, passion, greed, revenge, illness and death weave together to create a historical, allegorical and lyrical tale. Written by María Victoria García, who is also the author of "Vi(r)aje a la memoria", "Lejos de aquí", lejos de los profano" and "Historias de otros".

Being a woman during the nineteenth century in Mexico was not an easy task. Even those who did not dream of marriage and family had no choice but to embroider and pray, as society proclaimed that woman who thinks can fall into sin easily, and thus introduces the Devil. But Soledad Ugarte, the protagonist of "Quién como Dios", never stopped thinking. And as she learned to suppress her desires, she knew that the world was made for men, that the pleasure of flesh is not a sin, and appearances and good manners can hide the worst family lies. Written by Eladia González, who is also the author of "Mi nombre es Eva", "Las cartas de Ema Galán" and "El misterio de las damas chinas".

"El demonio de la interpretación. Hermetismo, literatura y mito" can be read in three ways: as a reading log, as a theory of interpretation and as a literary piece. It offers the testimony of a reader who has delved into non-orthodox texts such as the Gnostic Gospels, reinterpreting literary heritage from this unusual perspective. This account also reads as a polyphonic novel in which historical characters coexist with the mythical and the literary to tell us the evolution of two antiheroes, fictitious but very influential: Faust, the humanist, and Hermes, the subject and the demon of interpretation.

"Friquis" tells the story of Tania Monroy, host of a popular Saturday morning television program. She goes in for plastic surgery for the 20th time, but this time the procedure fails and she is mutilated. Paparazzi photographs the monstrous face that was once one of the most beautiful in the country. With dark humor, author Fernando Lobo peers into the low quality of broadcast television programming, and the dubious moral quality of celebrities, reporters and managers.

Novel by Mexican author Fernando Lobo, who also wrote "Traslados / El expediente Baunman" (1999), "Después de nada" (2002), "Relato del suicidio" (2007), "No lo tomes personal" (2008), and "Contacto en Cabo" (2009)

"Aquella luz púrpura" is a collection of stories centering around protagonists who strive to connect with those around them, exposing the magnitude of their loneliness. Relationships between the sexes often function as a cornerstone of these stories, either through a frustrated man who goes out to a bar with the intention of finding a woman to help him cope with his despair; an older lover who hunts his ghosts from past; or a young man who, in return for a brief dose of artificial paradise, surrenders himself to those who despise him. However, these characters do not seem to be guided by a genuine desire for love, but by the eagerness to avoid feeling overwhelmed and to escape from their internal emptiness. Author Alfredo Loera creates characters who pass through a labyrinth of boredom and dissatisfaction, and sometimes believe that the only way out is to push their actions to the limit. At the same time, he also reveals the fragility and persistence of people who never give up their thirst for communion with the world.

"La niña Frida" is a novel that begins when Antonio Negrín, a thirteen-year-old boy, is shot in his classroom. No one can explain his immolation. Alejandra Llure, the boy's mother and director of the regional museum of Orizaba, goes to detective Max Retana in an attempt to solve the case. The key could be in a young woman who goes into ecstasy to become Frida Kahlo herself. The novel then travels to the tragic years in which the prodigious Mexican painter lived, chronicling art thieves who violate sacristies, mansions where paintings of disturbing obscenity are treasured centerpieces, and a regime that sows the country with "necessary murders." To follow the case, Retana must face unheard-of scenarios: illicit loves, the shadow of perversion that appears in confessionals and the discovery of a painting that becomes the holy grail of Mexican art.

"Dieciséis toneladas" is a novel that opens with the police finding several bodies that show no signs of violence, except for a slight bruise on the temples. But there is a suspicion that they were murdered, although the signs are confusing and the only trait that links the victims to each other is their passion for music. Rafael, a coroner who is struggling through emotional ruins after being abandoned by his wife, is assigned to investigate the case. He works together with Larry, a policeman who has also experienced personal devastation. Little by little, their investigations reveal a world of prostitutes, retired boxers, musicians with shattered lives and those who could never overcome their addictions. The characters embody battles between violence, love, death, salvation, desire and ambition, while at the same time test the persistence of myths. This work won the Jose Revueltas National Young Novel Prize in 2016.

Although both arise from the same river as the narrative, history and literature seem to inhabit opposite banks. Or, based on the premise in "En camas separadas", they inhabit the same room, but separate beds. In order to examine whether there is a real border between the two disciplines, Jean Meyer, Antonio Saborit, Ignacio Sánchez Prado, Luis Barron, Susana Quintanilla, Alejandro Araujo, José Mariano Leyva, Sarah Pollack, Oswaldo Zavala and David Miklos analyze Mexican literature and its immediate history, and how they weave together in fiction, reality, works of art, popular culture, theory, practice and events.

This is a two-volume collection. "El amor que me juraste" is a novel about desire and love, and the origin of passion and guilt. It begins with the hopelessness and boredom of the protagonist, who has to reconcile with a lack of love, or a reunion with it. This narrative was nominated for the Short List of the International Impact Dublin Literary Award in 2001 for its translation into English, "The Love You Promised Me", and obtained the Sor Juana Ines de la Cruz International Prize in 1998 from the Guadalajara International Book Fair.

"En silencio, la lluvia" centers around the resistance, non-acceptance, surrender, resignation, rupture and freedom of three women. The narrator of the tale rebels against her parents' desires, and leaves the country in search of a new life in Belgium. From this point, three stories, three passions, three wounds, and three encounters unravel.

"Madres y perros" is a novel that centers around several simultaneous stories: A man leaves his brother's dog for three days, for fear that she will attack him, while the brother cares for their dying mother; another man pretends to be interested in buying the apartment where he spent his childhood, when in reality he only wants to impose on the tenants, who have the same furniture as when his family lived there; two men who do not know each other wait for two trucks traveling in opposite directions in a desert wasteland and, under the oppressive heat, end up exchanging their destinies. Through these stories, in which despair and comedy often go hand in hand, author Fabio Morabito demonstrates that the normality of everyday life is anything but uniform. Morábito was born in Egypt but has lived in Mexico since he was fifteen. His other publications include the poetry collection "Delante de un prado una vaca" (2011), the novel "Emilio, los chistes y la muerte" (2009) and the short story collection "Grieta de fuego" (2006).

"Comercio y circulacion de libros en Nueva España" is a collection of studies that center around two documents on the commerce of books during the colonial era, providing insight into the Mexican Inquisition: "Autos formados con el motivo de una carta orden de su alteza que manda se notifique a los libreros del distrito de esta Inquisición lo que dentro consta (México, 1757)" and "Expediente formado en virtud de orden del Excelentísimo Señor Ynquisidor General Don Ramon Josef de Arze, Arzobispo de Zaragoza, sobre la obra de Pedro Nicole. (México, 1802)". Both of the documents refer to bookstores in cities, towns and important ports of the viceroyalty at the time; the second also provides information on which convents and schools had a library. Contents include: "Carta Orden Impresa que los Señores del Consejo de la Suprema Inquisición envían al Santo Oficio de México, sobre varias providencias que han de practicar con los libreros y comerciantes de libros (Mexico, 1756)", "Autos formados con el motivo de una carta orden de su alteza que manda se notifique a los libreros del distrito de esta Inquisición lo que dentro consta (Mexico, 1757)", "Sobre que se haga saber a todos los comerciantes de libros y libreros de ese distrito de Binondoc, tengan en su poder el nuevo índice expurgatorio del año de 1747 (1756)" and "Orden para que se recojan de todos los libreros que no tuvieron licencia para leer libros prohibidos las obras de Pedro Nicole impresas en francés o en castellano (1802)", among other chapters.

"Las confidentes" centers around two women who get together to tell each other stories, but who suddenly become their own characters. Over the course of a day and a night, they establish a duel of stories -- originally made of dreams and personal memories, they become complicated and incorporate enchantments, perversions, witches and fortune tellers in nightmarish mansions, as well as the doubles of Humphrey Bogart and Peter Lorre in Casablanca. The fifteen stories that comprise this work create a fascinating plot about the darkness that we have inside and a radiant chronicle of the trance that occurs when we tell stories.

"Dulcinea" is a novel that centers around Dulcinea, who drives around the periphery Mexico City every day -- hypnotized by traffic, she daydreams about all the novels she'll never write. In her mind she travels around Mexico, Russia and Spain. Literature becomes the way to escape from the world, but also to reinterpret it and apprehend it, until the real world and literature are amalgamated and lose their borders. Written by poet, narrator and essayist Angelina Muñiz-Huberman, who introduced the neohistorical novel and Sephardic mystique to Mexican literature. Her work has been translated into several languages and included in several international anthologies.

For centuries, travelers have turned their experiences into journals, chronicles and blogs. Writing is another way of crossing borders, a privileged way to leave or find the way back. "Aves migratorias" follows this tradition by proposing ten routes that involve both real cities and other more inasible territories: language, memory, pain, desire and body. With a nostalgic, lucid and subtle look, these pages lead us through the underground city of Cappadocia, explore the vicissitudes of a Berlin marked by a historical fracture, recall a shocking child exodus and recreate the intimacy of the space we inhabit.

Migratory birds was recognized with the National Prize for Young Essay José Vasconcelos 2016. The author has a remarkable evocation capacity and underpins her reflections with emotional anecdotes, historical information and literary references in precise doses.

"La vaga ambición" is a collection of short stories by Antonio Ortúñoz, who strips the autofiction genre of its lethargy and makes it boil with tragedy, irony and vitality. The protagonist of these intertwined tales - a middle-aged writer, Arturo Murray - struggles with family catastrophes, bad reviews, empty interviews, half-hearted presentations, and a bank account that's increasingly in the red. Armed with sarcasm and dramatic conviction, Murray invokes an army of heroic memories and a deep shock at loss. This collection includes the titles: "Un trago de aceite", "El caballero de los espejos", "Quinta temporada", "Provocación repugnante", "El príncipe con mil enemigos" and "La Batalla de Hastings". Ortúñoz won the Fifth Bank of the Douro Prize for this work.

From 1973 to 2014, the weekly column "Inventory" was a necessary reference to understand Mexican culture; renowned poet, essayist, novelist and short story writer Jose Emilio Pacheco's erudition provided insight into Mexican literature, history and the most significant cultural events. Pacheco sought to understand these events by linking them to broader, often unexpected, contexts. "Inventory" eventually transformed into a new literary genre, a space where everything was connected through agile and intelligent texts that deftly combined information with imagination; where history and literature were constantly intertwining with one another; and where one had the sense of peering at the brink of future events. "Inventario. Antología" is a three-volume collection that spans approximately four decades and features a third of the aforementioned texts published during that time frame. This comprehensive work also includes a clear account of their deserved prestige.

"Paraíso clausurado" is a novel that centers around Juan Gavito, a renowned poet and university professor who, tired of the loneliness and the suffering of living, embarks on a path to self-destruction, a true descent into hell that is narrated by his faithful disciple and friend Eladio. For Juan, there is only one way to face the futility and pain of existence: through art and literature, even though he himself has stopped writing. For Eladio there is only one obsession: to gather the unpublished works of his master and to finish his works that were left unfinished. Their lives intersect, reflect, and contrast in a kind of Socratic dialectic between pupil and teacher. In the same way, each of their personal narratives is contrasted with the dreams and memories of the other. This work won the Xavier Villaurrutia prize.

"El cuerpo eléctrico" is a novel set in 1876 in Mexico. President Profirio Díaz sends Deputy Cristino Lobatón to accompany Lucía Zárate, a dwarf, to a Philadelphia Fair. Lobatón quickly realizes that Lucía is a gold mine, and begins to manage her bright artistic career, which takes them on a tour through Europe and the US. While in the US, he notices that the train route could be used to transport opium. Not realizing that he is about to bring about an industry that will put the planet into turmoil, he finds a Chinese partner to help with the trafficking. Bold, rogue, cynical, and increasingly wealthy, Lobatón is also an unconscious pioneer of rampant capitalism, mass industrialization, and oddly, ecological consciousness. This narrative forms an adventure and historical novel mixed with the picaresque, combining real and fictitious characters with a whirling prose that takes readers to unexpected territories.

An allegory of the world and the human condition, "Santa María del Circo" tells the story of a group of circus people who, upon arriving at a ghost town, try to found a new order and build upon the destroyed. Their lives become an endless search for their own redemption. On this path, tragedy and black humor, pain and irony are mixed. Eventually, the narration forms an overarching metaphorical observation: the world is a great circus, but without spectators. Written by David Toscana, who is also the author of "Estación Tula", "Lotananza", "Duelo por Miguel Pruneda", "Santa María del Circo", "Los puentes de Konigsberg", "El último lector", "La ciudad que el diablo se llevó", "El ejército iluminado" and "Evangelia".

"Las conspiraciones fallidas" is a collection of short stories, featuring characters who are prey to themselves, including Zapata, a revolutionary hero wrapped up in the superficiality of a selfie; a man who has an illness that doesn't allow him to be a consumerist in the capitalist world; octogenarian kidnappers who want their literary idol to sign a book; and naive protectors of animals that reach the extreme of anarchy. With each story, author Eric Uribares shows that we are composed of our ideas, which in turn shape society, and ultimately create our destruction. But beyond the interpretation and construction of characters or any underlying meaning, these stories are funny, quick narratives that surprise readers with unpredictable endings and provoke laughter, suspense and a wide diversity of reactions. Winner of the Sonora National Narrative prize in 2015.

"Cuento 2.0. Consideraciones sobre el cuento mexicano en la era de internet" examines how the Mexican story has been shaped by the era of the internet, specifically analyzing works created by writers in the 1970s. The central dilemma faced by the writers of the 70s is that their aesthetic references are often highly questioned: if their texts permeate themes of mass culture, they are accused of being superficial; if, on the contrary, they try to keep themselves faithful to a canonical literary tradition, the critics judge their works with parameters that are clearly unattainable. Thus, 70s authors no longer attempt to uphold these expectations, but instead experiment with journalism, dirty realism and garbage literature. The antiheroic and decadent characters who often populate their stories are a sign of the attitude of a generation with no more hope of improvement in the future. Author Gabriela Valenzuela Navarrete has dedicated this work to them -- the "inexistent generation".

"De la intimidad" is a collection of critical essays on Mexican poetic tradition, from an angle that makes it possible to simultaneously observe private and the public lives, as well as the subjective and political. The analyses examine the work of consecrated poets such as Ramón López Velarde, Octavio Paz and José Emilio Pacheco, as well as contemporary writers such as Jorge Fernández Granados, Ángel Ortuño and Luigi Amara. Through this work, author Luis Vicente de Aguinaga illustrates that poets always face the same questions and are all on the same constant search for both the other and of himself through words.
